A NOTE FROM KATE

Summer is flying by! I found myself reflecting recently about how in the spring, I prayed for the warm summer days, and now spend my evenings enjoying the air conditioning. I even find myself already searching autumn recipes and thinking about pumpkin farms. It reminded me of an article that was shared with me from the Daily Stoic which is a website that celebrates Stoicism (A philosophy designed to make us more resilient, happier, more virtuous and more wise). It stated: "Be wary of the urge to be constantly on the move. As the Stoics would say, you will not find what you think you are looking for- happiness, joy, serenity, peace, fulfillment- in externals. You can only find it internally. You have to build a life, a self, you don't want to escape from."

The other evening, I enjoyed watching the rain from my front porch and this morning, I rushed outside to enjoy tending to the garden with my morning tea. I've started making yoga a more regular routine and enjoy how rested and refreshed I feel after. I was lucky enough to join in on two recent day trips with our YMCA members as well as some hikes. During these opportunities I find I'm anxiously squeezing in a moment to catch up on emails and return phone calls. I will continue to work towards reminding myself, that where I currently am is exactly where I need to be.

Enjoy every ounce of the rest of your summer.

See you at the Y!
